Traditionally associated with set-top boxes,

Humax has used its digital television experience to create an LCD TV one step in front of the competition. This 26in set has a cutting-edge DVI digital video input and is Freeview-ready with two digital tuners.

There's also an analogue tuner, and the screen's intuitive picture-in-picture modes allow for all manner of channel hopping permutations.

But it's the connectivity that really wows as, alongside the DVI port, there are three Scarts (two RGB-enabled), component video (progressive scan ready), S-video and VGA inputs. Any or all of these can also be used with the PIP mode (or split-screen if you prefer).

There's also a socket for a TopUp TV card to get the most from Freeview, and an eight-day programme guide is supplied. It's a very impressive set all round. (RH)

PREVIEW

Highs: Impressive connectivity; two digital tuners; decent build quality – looks like it will last

Lows: Audio is a bit tinny from its own stereo speakers
